PROFESSIONAL SUMMARY

I am a historian of transportation infrastructure development focused on Mexico and the U.S.-Mexico borderlands. I write about the interplay between institutions and everyday people as they navigate and alter natural and built environments. Also, I am co-director of the digital history initiative, MX.DIGITAL which catalogues and visualizes historical data. I give classes on World History, History of Mexico, Global Environmental History and digital history workshops utilizing GIS and other applications. My current book project is a history of mobility and daily commutes in Mexico City covering 200 years to the present.
